

MALAYSIA'S ELECTORAL FRAUD BY NUMBERS

22% ↑

In the 12th general election of 2008, Pakatan Rakyat, the Opposition coalition, won the prized state of Selangor and wrested control of an economic and symbolic powerhouse in peninsular Malaysia; since 2008, the Selangor electoral rolls have ballooned by 22 per cent (over 340,000 voters) to more than 1.9 million, compared to a national average of 16.3 per cent

90%

Up to 90 per cent of ballots cast through Malaysia's postal voting system is believed to support the ruling Barisan Nasional coalition

31 294

31,294 voters have been transferred out of their 2008 state and parliamentary constituencies without their consent, including the incumbent Chief Minister of Selangor who was transferred out of his own state.

42 000

42,000 voters whose status as citizens cannot be verified by the National Registration Department are still on the roll

65 543

The electoral rolls carry 65,543 voters who are 85 years of age and older

1 000

There are 1000 voters aged more than 100 years, the oldest found was born in 1853.

15 855

15,855 voters on the roll have NRIC numbers showing they are of a different gender from that listed by the Election Commission

4500

4500 voters who are spouses of police officers are registered as postal voters in breach of the law

400K

Over 400,000 dubious voters are on the electoral roll, enough to swing 35 federal seats either way and decide if Pakatan Rakyat can capture Putrajaya or Barisan Nasional (BN) reclaim its customary two-thirds super-majority in Parliament, according to a polls analysis

15.4%

Sophisticated gerrymandering over 55 years enables the incumbent government to win 51% of the seats in parliament with just 15.4% of the popular votes cast

1 MILLION

Up to 1 million Malaysians residing overseas are denied their right to vote by the Electoral Commission of Malaysia.

0 SCRUTINY

Malaysia has refused access to international election watch groups ever since the 1990 general election when polling was observed by the Commonwealth Observer Mission.
