GROUND OF JUDGMENT

[1] There are three appeals before us relating to the judicial review application of the respondent in the High Court, where the respondent had applied to quash the administrative decision of the Pendaftar Muallaf, and not any orders of the Syariah Court. The learned trial judge had quashed the administrative decision and hence this appeal. The three appeals which were heard together are as follows:

- (i) Appeal No. A-02-1826-08/2013 by Pathmanathan a/l Krishnan;

- (ii) Appeal No. A-01-304-08/2013 by the Director of the Islamic Religious Affairs Department of Perak & Ors;
- (iii) Appeal No. A-01-316-09/2013 by the Ministry of Education Malaysia & Anor.

In my view, it is sufficient to deal with the appeal by Pathmanathan to dispose of the other two appeals.

[2] The prayers for judicial review read as follows:

- “(a) an Order of certiorari pursuant to Order 53 Rule 8(2) to remove the Certificates into the High Court to be quashed owing to non-compliance with section 99, 100 and 101 of the Administration of the Religion of Islam (Perak) Enactment 2004;
- (b) an order of prohibition pursuant to Order 53, Rule 1 restraining Pendaftar Muallaf and his servants, officers and/or agents from howsoever registering or causing to be registered the children and each of them as “Muslims” or “muallaf” pursuant to the Administration Enactment.
- (c) further or in the alternative, a declaration that the Certificates and each of them are null and void and of no effect as they are ultra vires and/or contrary to and/or inconsistent with
 - i. the provisions of Part IX and in particular section 106(b) of the Administration Enactment, and/or

- ii. Sections 5 and 11 of the Guardianship of Infants Act 1961 (Act 351), and/or
 - iii. Article 12(4) read together with Article 8(2) of the Federal Constitution.
- (d) Further or in the alternative, a declaration that the infants and each of them have not been converted to Islam in accordance with the law;
- (e) The costs of the application; and
- (f) Such further or other relief as the Honourable Court deems fit."

[3] Pendaftar Muallaf in the instant case is under the umbrella of the Pengarah Jabatan Agama Islam Perak and any administrative decision is amenable to judicial review. The parties do not dispute that it is an administrative decision. In consequence, the civil court has jurisdiction to hear the matter. It must be noted that the powers of the Pendaftar Muallaf is set out in the Administration of the Religion of Islam (Perak) Enactment 2004. The said Enactment consists of XI parts and 113 sections. [4] Not all the sections in the said Enactment are protected by Article 121 (1A) of the Federal Constitution and Article 121 and 121 (1A) reads as follows:

“121. (1) There shall be two High Courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction and status, namely—

(a) one in the States of Malaya, which shall be known as the High Court in Malaya and shall have its principal registry at such place in the States of Malaya as the Yang di-Pertuan Agong may determine; and

(b) one in the States of Sabah and Sarawak, which shall be known as the High Court in Sabah and Sarawak and shall have its principal registry at such place in the States of Sabah and Sarawak as the Yang di-Pertuan Agong may determine; and such inferior courts as may be provided by federal law; and the High Courts and inferior courts shall have such jurisdiction and powers as may be conferred by or under federal law.

“(1A) The courts referred to in Clause (1) shall have no jurisdiction in respect of any matter within the jurisdiction of the Syariah courts. (Empasis added).”

[5] The most relevant part where Article 121 (1A) is applicable to Syariah Courts is Part IV. Part IV has 22 sections i.e. sections 44 to 66. Not all the 22 sections are relevant to Article 121 (1A). It will also follow that other parts and sections in the Enactment will not be relevant to Article 121 (1A) of the Federal Constitution. The distinction is not one relating to apple and an orange but that of a marble and pumpkin; when it relates to public law relief. Article 121 (1A) does not permit the civil courts to deal with matters within the jurisdiction of the Syariah Courts. However, it does not exclude the jurisdiction of the civil courts' judicial review powers' in the administrative decision of the state or its agencies and/or its officers. What the civil courts cannot do is to intervene in the lawful decision of the Syariah Courts made within its jurisdiction and not in excess of its jurisdiction. To put it in a simple term, not all the sections under the Enactment are protected by Article 121 (1A). Cases which have not made out the distinction must be corrected by due process of law.

[6] In the instant case, the Pendaftar Muallaf certificate of conversion has nothing to do with the jurisdiction of the Syariah Court and/or decision of the Syariah Court as asserted in Article 121 (1A) of the Federal Constitution (emphasis added).

[7] The real question in this appeal is whether the Pendaftar Muallaf powers comes within the jurisdiction of the Syariah Court and in consequence is protected by Article 121 (1A) of the Federal Constitution? If the answer is in the negative, the decision of the Pendaftar Muallaf is subject to judicial review. The question is the test for public law relief, in matters relating to Civil and Syariah Court jurisdiction.

Brief Facts

[9] The appellant, Pathmanathan (husband) and the respondent, Indira Gandhi (wife) was married under the Civil Law Act 1976 and had three children of the marriage. The eldest daughter being 18 years old at the time of the hearing of this appeal renders the status of the eldest daughter in this appeal, purportedly academic. All parties have agreed that the issue is only in relation to the other two children.

[10] The husband converted to Islam on 11-3-2009 and subsequently on 8-4-2009 had obtained an ex-parte interim custody order for all the three children and later a permanent custody order from the Syariah Court on 29-9-2009 notwithstanding the clear provision of section 50 of the Perak Enactment, only gives jurisdiction to the Syariah Court in its civil jurisdiction to hear matters when the proceedings are related to Muslims. However, the appellant obtained the order from the Syariah Court against a non-Muslim which the Syariah Court has no jurisdiction at all.

[11] The conduct of the appellant obtaining an order from the Syariah Court against a non-Muslim is a mystery relating to jurisprudence and is not a subject matter of the judicial review application before the High Court. However, the parties on the frolic of their own and the respondent by placing alternative prayers had confused the learned trial judge with convoluted arguments resulting in a convoluted judgment which in my view is unnecessary, taking into consideration the simple and basic issues involved in this case. The said judgment is reported in MLJ citation - Indira Gandhi a/p Mutho v Pengarah Jabatan Agama Islam Perak & Ors [2013] 5 MLJ 552.

Jurisprudence Relating Parliamentary and Constitutional Supremacy and Constitutional Oath

[12] To explain to the litigant why I say that parties have resorted to convoluted arguments and jurisprudence which had resulted in convoluted judgment, it is all because of lack of appreciation relating to:

- (i) Concept of parliamentary and constitutional supremacy;

- (ii) Rule of law relating to parliamentary and constitutional supremacy;
- (iii) The oath of judge in a country like England which practices parliamentary supremacy; and
- (iv) The oath of a judge in countries like India and Malaysia which practices constitutional supremacy.
- (v) Relying on judgment which has not applied the right version of the rule of law.

[13] It is well settled that Malaysia, like India, is a country which has a written constitution and in consequence the constitution is supreme. Executive decision as well as legislative action is subject to the framework of the constitution. The three pillars, the executive, legislature and the judiciary have taken an oath to preserve, protect and defend the constitution. By the oath of office they are not allowed to make any arbitrary decision in any of their decision making process. They are, by the sacrosanct oath of office, had undertaken to protect the fundamental rights enshrined in the Federal Constitution. They can only do so if they apply the rule of law relating to constitutional supremacy. Ironically what has transpired in Malaysia is that some of the courts' decisions are only based on constitutional supremacy and a large majority of the decision which affects the fundamental rights are based on parliamentary supremacy. Those important decisions which was based on the jurisprudence relating to parliamentary supremacy appears not to have inspired confidence in the judicial decision making process and the cause of convoluted jurisprudence inconsistent with the oath of office. It all started as a result of the infamous case of Government of Malaysia v Lim Kit Siang* [1988] 2 MLJ 12, where the Supreme Court by majority had ruled that a tax payer had no locus standi to question the policy of the Government and the Court by majority in that case said it will not interfere with the policy of the Government.

[14] The decision had a damaging effect on all subsequent decisions relating to fundamental rights. For, it must be noted that the effect of Lim Kit Siang's case in practical terms compromised the doctrine of accountability, transparency and good governance and the check and balance to control arbitrariness by public decision makers such as executive and legislature. Arbitrariness is not part of our jurisprudence as propounded by HRH Raja Azlan Shah in the case of Pengarah Tanah dan Galian, Wilayah Persekutuan v Sri Lempah Enterprise Sdn Bhd [1979] 1 MLJ 135, where HRH observed:

“Unfettered discretion is a contradiction in terms. Every legal power must have legal limits, otherwise there is dictatorship. In particular, it is a stringent requirement that discretion should be exercised for a proper purpose, and that it should not be exercised unreasonably. In other words, every discretion cannot be free from legal restraint; where it is wrongly exercised, it becomes the duty of the courts to intervene. The courts are the only defence of the liberty of the subject against departmental aggression. In these days when government departments and public authorities have such great powers and influence, this is a most important safeguard for the ordinary citizen: so that the courts can see that these great powers and influence are exercised in accordance with law.”

[14A] In jurisprudential terms when you take into consideration the distinction in oath office of an English and Malaysian judge, the anchor principles advocated in the case of Sri Lempah demolishes the non-justiciability doctrine and replaces it with the concept of arbitrariness.

That is to say in an application for Judicial Review of (a) Executive decision; or (b) Legislation; or (c) Constitutional amendment; or (d) Policy decision of the Government, the public decision maker's decision must not be arbitrary and/or impinge on the concept of arbitrariness. If it does, according to HRH Raja Azlan Shah, there is dictatorship. I will explain this further in my judgment.

[15] The test propounded by HRH Raja Azlan Shah is simple and straight forward and it applies to all public decision makers which will include the three pillars. The failure of the courts to strictly follow the test will compromise the concept of accountability, transparency and good governance, thereby compromising the rule of law or worst still make it sterile.

[16] The jurisprudential effect of Lim Kit Siang's case is seen in the instant case. In the instant case, the respondent is arguing the case based on constitutional supremacy to sustain her fundamental rights. However, the appellants are arguing the case based on parliamentary supremacy without realising that the respondent's fundamental rights are being trampled by such arguments. The learned judge correctly in consequence of constitutional oath to preserve, protect and defend the constitution had engaged the jurisprudence relating to constitutional supremacy. The instant case in actual fact is a clash in jurisprudence relating to parliamentary and constitutional supremacy. In consequence, the arguments and reasons for the judgments has become convoluted not only in this case but also many other cases relating to public law. I will, in simple terms, explain the relevant jurisprudence as follows:

(a) Jurists Have Not Been Adequately Trained by the British To Administer the Written Constitution

The distinction, concept, jurisdiction and power of courts in the regime of parliamentary supremacy and constitutional supremacy was eloquently summarised by the learned author, Peter Leyland, in his book 'The Constitution of the United Kingdom', (2nd Ed), 2012 at p 50 as follows:

“A further crucially important point about legal sovereignty which will be relevant in relation to many issues under discussion in this book is that this principle determines the relationship between Parliament and the courts. It means that although the courts have an interpretative function in regard to the application of legislation, it is Parliament, and not the courts, which has the final word in determining the law. This is markedly different from most codified constitutions. For example, in the United States, the Supreme Court held in Marbury v Madison (1803) 1 Cranch 137, that it could determine whether laws passed by Congress and the President were in conformity with the constitution, permitting judicial review of constitutional powers. The situation in the United States is that ultimately there is judicial rather than legislative supremacy. (Emphasis added.)

Notwithstanding the above distinction, the British failed to instruct or sufficiently distinguish this separation when the colonies were given independence with a written constitution. India had a problem when they applied the rule of law relating to parliamentary supremacy to administer the constitution. They have overcome that glitch by introducing the 'basic structure jurisprudence' as part of the rule of law. Malaysia has a problem with the rule of law and administration of the constitution. That problem has been highlighted by a press statement recently by the Fourth Pillar. That problem in my view can be overcome by creating greater awareness of the constitutional oath jurisprudence to all public decision makers and the court strictly enforcing the jurisprudence in all aspect of public law challenges. In simple terms, the judiciary is only required to arrest arbitrariness and nothing more. Arresting arbitrariness does not mean interfering with the doctrine of separation of powers. The distinction is like that of an apple and an orange. In addition, when the executive decision or legislation, or constitutional amendment is quashed or struck out, it does not mean the executive or legislature cannot review their decision and/or legislate to confirm with the rule of law and the constitution.

An important impediment in law and jurisprudence to protect fundamental rights as embodied in the constitution is that the judges and jurists were never trained to administer the constitution within the norms of constitutional supremacy. The training received from the British which largely continues was the rule of law related to parliamentary supremacy. That does not contribute to nurturing fundamental rights in colonies where the mass are 'uninformed' as opposed to informed members of the public. For example, it is doubtful whether unjust laws and unjust decisions will find a place in England where the society is largely well informed. The same may not be the case in colonies once administered by the British. In fact, there was a different set of legislation employed by the British in England as opposed to that in the colonies though the administration of the judicial principle appeared to be the same. That is to say, it is not how the English judges decide but it is actually what was provided in the legislation and/or the common law and the nature of jurisprudence they employ to tackle the problem. If the legislation does not provide for fundamental rights, then the English judges by judicial activism cannot do so. That is their conventional limit. Though judicial activism is shunned in England, as the judges are by oath of office subservient to the legislation, on the contrary 'Judicial Dynamism' is expected of judges in a country with a written constitution to protect fundamental rights within the constitutional framework; more so when they have taken an oath to preserve, protect and defend the constitution. What is shunned in England as judicial activism is a constitutional obligation for judges here to meet the legitimate public expectation as per the constitution.

A large majority of jurists here and elsewhere have not taken note of the difference in the oath of office under the constitution when they criticise judicial dynamism as judicial activism.

(b) Different Versions of Rule of Law

The version of rule of law applied in parliamentary and constitutional supremacy nations are not the same. To put it in simple terms:

- (i) The doctrine of parliamentary supremacy as practiced in England takes the position parliament knows best what is good for the people. The Judiciary must give effect to parliament's will. Judges take oath to be subservient to the legislation. Judicial activism is not permissible. Rule of law requires the judiciary to be subservient to the legislation and show deference to the policy of the Government. Parliament and/or executive by policy can choose not to uphold the concept of accountability, transparency and good governance. The courts cannot go against the will of parliament and must give great deference to the policy of the Government.

- (ii) The doctrine of constitutional supremacy takes the position that parliament must be guided by the constitution. The Judiciary must make sure that parliament legislates according to the constitutional framework and all its agencies administer the legislation according to the rule of law related to constitutional supremacy. For this purpose the judiciary takes an oath to preserve, protect and defend the constitution. Judges are expected by the public to demonstrate 'judicial dynamism' to protect the constitution as well as protect fundamental rights. Parliament as well as the executive must uphold the concept of accountability, transparency and good governance as failure to do so will breach the constitutional framework. Judges by oath of office are entrusted to ensure the constitutional framework is not breached. Rule of law requires the judiciary to be subservient to the constitution and condone policy of the government, provided it does not breach the constitutional framework or the doctrine of accountability, transparency and good governance. Towards this end, the 'Rukun Negara' was introduced to ensure all the pillars of the Constitution as well as the public are beholden to: (a) Belief in God; (b) Loyalty to the King and Country; and (c) Supremacy of the Constitution; (d) Rule of Law; (e) Courtesy and Morality.

(c) What Version of the Rule of Law?

The judiciary has a greater role to play and to sustain the rule of law. The argument now is which version of the rule of law? The rule of law relating to parliamentary or constitutional supremacy? Professor Andrew Harding, in essence, says 'the right version of the rule of law is not applied here'.

It is important to appreciate the right version of the rule of law and its administration plays an important role to rest a successful nation. I will explain this in lay terms as follows:

- (i) the right version of the rule of law will turn a desert into an oasis;

- (ii) the wrong version of the rule of law will turn an oasis to a desert;
- (iii) the role of the courts under the constitution is to apply the right version of the rule of law to ensure that an oasis is not turned to a desert;
- (iv) under the constitution, the court's role is not to turn a desert into an oasis. That role to turn a desert into an oasis rests with the other pillars and not the courts. The courts role is limited, to that extent. These separate roles are often referred to as separation of powers. However, when the courts' decision paves way for an oasis to be turned into a desert that may be referred to as fusion of powers. Fusion of powers is an anathema to the constitutional framework and will impinge on fundamental rights and justice.

The jurisprudence involved in administration of justice in both of these concepts namely parliamentary and constitutional supremacy is not one and the same. That is to say, when a judge or coram applies the rule of law relating to parliamentary supremacy in India or Malaysia, the decision may not be the same as that of another judge or coram who applies the rule of law relating to constitutional supremacy. In relation to fundamental rights, a decision based on parliamentary supremacy may not inspire confidence on the affected populace when there is a legitimate expectation that the judiciary by its oath of office would act to protect the fundamental rights provided under the constitution. This dilemma was felt in India in the early post-independence days when the courts were relying on the rule of law relating to parliamentary supremacy in interpreting the legislation and/or the constitution. Subsequently, the Indian judges in my view realised the shortcomings and inadequate jurisprudence to administer the constitution and to overcome that, they came out with an innovative jurisprudence called the 'Basic Structure' jurisprudence to ensure parliament does not interfere with the constitutional framework and also to sustain fundamental rights to uphold justice. Basic structure jurisprudence is well documented by Justice V. Dhanapalan (retired), Judge of the High Court of Madras in his recent book titled 'Basic Structure of the Indian Constitution – An Overview" (2015). It is a must read for all jurists who are committed to justice and the Constitution.

(d) Parliamentary Supremacy

The doctrine of parliamentary supremacy is feudalistic in nature. It rests the power of the sovereign, or the King as the case may be in England, on the parliament. It is just one step near to dictatorship when the majority of the elected members of parliament become self-serving and the role of the court even in that instance is to serve self-serving legislation and not the public. In consequence, English judges cannot strike down legislation even if parliament enacts unjust laws or compromises its sovereignty by treaties and or sells off its territory to other states or private persons, etc. by way of legislation or through executive giving out largesse to nominees. If an issue is raised in court, the judges in England there may just say it's the policy of the Government and that they are not adequately equipped to interfere. When it relates to private rights, the English judiciary would receive 'expert evidence' if necessary, on the issue which would not be the case for public law relief. It will appear that they employ double standards of reasoning in public and private law field. However, such an approach is an accepted norm and justified within the framework of parliamentary supremacy though such an approach may be illegal or irrational in the 'Wednesbury' sense when employed in a nation which has subscribed to constitutional supremacy.

(e) Constitutional Supremacy

In the regime of parliamentary supremacy, the public will have no recourse when the majority of the parliamentarians abuse the system as there are no checks and balances on the might of parliament in that system. In consequence, the founding fathers of the Indian constitution as well as the Malaysian constitution, rejected the concept of parliamentary supremacy and accepted the doctrine of constitutional supremacy like that of US, and ensured by the constitutional oath of office of the legislature, executive and the judiciary, that they are beholden to preserve, protect and defend the constitution. The judiciary was entrusted as the supreme policeman as well as the judge of the constitution to supervise all the constitutional functionaries to ensure that the rule of law which is an essential jurisprudence to protect the constitution is maintained. The Government in Malaysia under the constitutional framework means all the pillars as each and every pillar has a specific role to play to preserve, protect and defend the constitution. That is not the case in England and the judiciary is the weaker arm of the Government and has no role to play in governing the nation per se save to be subservient to parliament and ensure the rule of law is sustained. That is not the case here or in India as per the constitution and in Malaysia particularly because of the constitutional Judicial Power to sustain rule of law endowed to the Fourth Pillar through the oath of office of HRH Yang di Pertuan Agong.

The judiciary per se here is not the weaker arm but the supreme policing arm of the constitution. In my view, HRH is placed as the constitutional guardian of the rule of law and order in the country. This is reflected in the oath of office of HRH. The relevant part of the constitutional oath of His Majesty pursuant to art. 37(1) reads as follows:

...and by virtue of that oath do solemnly and truly declare that We shall justly and faithfully perform (carry out) our duties in the administration of Malaysia in accordance with its laws and Constitution which have been promulgated or which may be promulgated from time to time in the future. Further, We do solemnly and truly declare that We shall at all-time protect the Religion of Islam and uphold the rules of law and order in the Country. (Emphasis added)

The shortcoming of the doctrine of constitutional supremacy is that if the judiciary becomes a compliant judiciary and fails to uphold the jurisprudence relating to constitutional supremacy and leans towards parliamentary supremacy, then the protection to the public would be lost and it will result in a step nearer to dictatorship. Once the protection to the public is lost, then there is no 'separation of powers' which is integral to constitutional supremacy. The result would be 'fusion of powers' reflective of dictatorial regime and the demise of the constitution. The founding fathers of the Indian constitution in my view arguably were not vigilant to provide any mechanism to arrest a compliant judiciary. In India, it will appear that the 'free and independent press' stands as a check and balance to arrest the dilatory conduct of the three pillars. Not all countries which has subscribed to the constitution has a 'free and independent press'.

(f) Fourth Pillar

The founding fathers of the Malaysian constitution were vigilant and they provided a Fourth Pillar and in my view the most powerful pillar to protect the rule of law and order in the country, which was not the case in India. The Fourth Pillar is none other than their Royal Highness (the Rulers) and this is reflected in the constitutional oath of office of the HRH Yang di Pertuan Agong. To perform the oath, His Majesty is made the Supreme Commander of the Armed Forces with no executive shackles and also placed as the 'Head' of the Armed Forces Council. This is not the case in India.

It is extremely disheartening to note that most Malaysian jurists arguably have not realised this distinction and instead argue the role of Rulers is only ceremonial in nature as is the case of the President of India. The Malaysian jurists appear to have been highly influenced by the writings from India, in relation to the role of the President of India.

(g) Rule of Law and Reasonableness

One of the important facets of rule of law is the keyword 'reasonableness'. This word runs through all forms of executive decisions, legislation and the constitution. The antithesis and/or anathema to rule of law is arbitrariness. Any form of arbitrariness in decision making process or legislation making process and/or constitutional amending process must not subscribe to arbitrariness. Any jurists who attempts to say reasonableness is not a component of the constitution or the rule of law in my view, will only articulate 'comical jurisprudence', a matter to be shunned at. The comical jurisprudence if not checked promptly by the relevant pillars, may lead to the demise of the constitution and/or impinge on fundamental rights and justice.

The judiciary has a constitutional role by oath of office to arrest arbitrariness failing which it has been placed in the hands of the Fourth Pillar, to ensure the country is ruled by rule of law and not rule by law or by any judicial proposition to imply that the judiciary knows best what is good for the country. Such judicial proposition is illegal in the 'Wednesbury' sense, both under the jurisprudence relating to parliamentary as well as constitutional supremacy. Courts cannot legislate; at the most they can give guidance or directions only.

In my view and based on authorities from respectable jurisdiction, under the jurisprudence relating to constitutional supremacy and oath of office:

- (i) executive decision cannot be arbitrary;
- (ii) formulation of legislation cannot be arbitrary and the legislation, even if made according to the provision of law and/or constitution, must pass the strict test of reasonableness and proportionality, failing which it will be caught by the doctrine of arbitrariness as per decided cases;
- (iii) Constitutional amendment cannot be arbitrarily done. Even if the constitutional amendment is valid, it must pass the strict acid test of reasonableness and proportionality.
- (iv) in the Malaysian context, the legislature, executive and the judiciary cannot make arbitrary decision as the decision may be subjected to the scrutiny of the Fourth Pillar which is the supreme pillar and arbiter to maintain the rule of law and order in the country under the Constitution. This is not the case in India if the Judiciary becomes a compliant judiciary as there is no Fourth Pillar to check arbitrariness.

I do not wish to say much in respect of the jurisprudence relating to rule of law save to say that any decision by the executive, legislature or judiciary must not subscribe to the concept of illegality, irrationality, procedural impropriety. The decision must also pass the test of reasonableness and proportionality as advocated in many of the English as well as the Indian cases. On my part, I have dealt with the concepts in detail in more than ten judgments in particular the jurisprudence relating to constitutional oath of office. They are as follows: (i) Nik Noorhafizi bin Nik Ibrahim & Ors v PP [2014] 2 CLJ 273; (ii) Nik Nazmi bin Nik

Ahmad v PP [2014] 4 CLJ 944; (iii) Teh Guat Hong v Perbadanan Tabung Pendidikan Tinggi Nasional [2015] 3 AMR 35; (iv) Chong Chung Moi @ Christine Chong v The Government of the State of Sabah & Ors [2007]5 MLJ 441.

(h) Judicial Review

Judicial review is the process where legislative and executive actions are reviewed by the judiciary upon a complaint of the public that his or their rights have been infringed by the legislature and/or executive or inferior tribunal, etc. Judicial review parameters of the court within the jurisprudence of parliamentary supremacy are limited. For example, it is trite that English judges cannot review a legislation and strike it down wholly or partly unless it is a subsidiary legislation. English judges can review any form of executive decision but will be slow in doing so if it is related to policy of the Government.

Judicial review parameters of the court under the doctrine of constitutional supremacy are wide. The judiciary is empowered to review (a) executive decision; (b) legislation; (c) any constitutional amendments; (d) any policy decision. The methodology they can employ in any of the review process is principally based on the jurisprudence that the executive and/or legislative decisions must confirm to the constitutional framework and the decision making process must not be arbitrary. For example, if a legislation or constitutional amendment or policy, violates the constitutional framework, it will be struck down as of right based on ultra vires doctrine. If the ultra vires doctrine is not applicable, the court may employ the concept relating to illegality, irrationality, procedural impropriety, reasonableness and proportionality to check the decision making process of the executive. However, where it relates to legislative decisions concerning legislature and/or constitutional amendment, the court in India applies the doctrine of basic structure jurisprudence to strike down the legislation and/or constitutional amendment. What the courts have not done is to apply the constitutional oath doctrine to strike down the legislative and/or constitutional amendment if the legislature has been found to have acted arbitrarily.

That is to say, the court, to sustain the rule of law cannot allow arbitrariness to creep in any executive or legislative or constitutional amendment or policy making process. In essence, under the doctrine of constitutional oath the legislature or executive or judiciary cannot make any arbitrary decision. For example, (i) if the executives' decision is arbitrary, it ought to be quashed; (ii) if it is shown that the legislative action in enacting the legislation or the constitutional amendment was arbitrary, it ought to be struck down even if the ultra vires doctrine is not applicable; (iii) if the policy formulated is arbitrary it may be struck down. That is to say, arbitrariness makes the decision of the executive and/or legislative action a nullity ab initio. An ultra vires act of the executive or legislature viz-a-viz the constitution makes the whole decision or legislation or Constitutional amendment or policy illegal.

In the Malaysian context, where the executive or legislature or judiciary makes any arbitrary decision or conduct themselves arbitrarily even in parliament that too by parliamentarians that will be inconsistent with the rule of law, and/or constitutional framework. The English courts have no such powers to intervene in the affairs of parliament and parliamentary practice there is a matter largely of convention. Parliamentary practice based on constitution is subject to rule of law. That is not the case in England. The oath of office of the HRH gives constitutional, judicial power to HRH to arrest any form of breach of rule of law as judicial power to do so is entrenched in the oath of office of HRH. Employment of procedure for that is purely an administrative exercise based on established principles of natural justice. Just because there is no procedure it does not mean the constitutional oath with the constitutional, judicial power was formulated in vain. The constitutional, judicial power of HRH pursuant to the constitutional oath is unique to the Malaysian constitution and such powers have never been exercised in full force from the inception of the constitution save as to the recent press statement of the HRH the Rulers on rule of law. In consequence, there is hardly any literature on the subject in India or globally, though a fair minded jurist having informed of the difference will concur on the role of the Fourth Pillar.

(i) Rule of Law and Rule by Law

Rule of law is a generic term and in consequence no one yet has been able to define its parameters. For example, there may be presence of rule of law in a communist, socialist, democratic, Syariah regime, etc. The real question here is what version of rule of law need to be applied to administer a written constitution. One important aspect on the selection process is that any principles of law which does not promote transparency, accountability and good governance and if also the application of that principle, leads to endemic corruption, cannot be the rule of law envisaged in the Constitution or Rukun Negara. It is one relating to common sense approach and as Lord Denning often says if common sense is not applied in the administration of justice, it would not lead to justice or words to that effect.

I do not wish to elaborate on the parameters of rule of law save to say it is now an accepted norm that law as per the constitutional framework should govern a nation, as opposed to governed by arbitrary decisions or legislation and/or constitutional amendments. Rule by law is an antithesis to rule of law and is now seen as anathema in democratic country more so in countries which are subject to a constitutional framework when the decision of the executive, legislature and the judiciary is tainted with arbitrariness. The line may appear to be thin but the distinction is like that of comparing a marble to the size of a pumpkin and the distinction is not like apple to an orange. Rule of law paves the way for progress of democratic nations and nips corruption in the bud and rule by law leads to destruction of the nation when by its application corruption sets in. The ultimate result is that it will compromise fundamental rights as corruption often leads to squandering of national assets or its revenue and hits the poor the most. In Nik Noorhafizi bin Nik Ibrahim & Ors v PP [2014] 2 CLJ 273, the importance of rule of law was emphasised as follows:

“(d) It is pertinent to note that a compliant judiciary or bench cannot stand as a bulwark of liberty. A compliant judiciary or bench is one which does not want to subscribe to its sacrosanct oath, and Rukun Negara and does not believe in Rule of Law and does not want to protect the constitution and abrogates its role by saying that it has no judicial power and paves way for Rule by Law. It is for the public through Parliament or His Royal Highness (HRH), the Rulers, in particular the Yang Di Pertuan Agong (His Majesty) to initiate the steps to arrest the progress of a compliant judiciary and ensure that the judiciary is independent to protect the constitution and sustain the Rule of Law. A compliant judiciary will directly and/or indirectly promote all form of vice which in all likelihood will destabilise the nation as well as harmony and security. In [Lim Kit Siang v. Dato' Seri Dr. Mahathir Mohamad \[1987\] 1 CLJ 40; \[1987\] CLJ \(Rep\) 168; \[1987\] 1 MLJ 383](#) the Supreme Court had this to say:

When we speak of government it must be remembered that this comprises three branches, namely, the legislature, the executive and the judiciary. The courts have a constitutional function to perform and they are the guardian of the Constitution within the terms and structure of the Constitution itself; they not only have the power of construction and interpretation of legislation but also the power of judicial review -- a concept that pumps through the arteries of every constitutional adjudication and which does not imply the superiority of judges over legislators but of the Constitution over both. The courts are the final arbiter between the individual and the State and between individuals inter se, and in performing their constitutional role they must of necessity and strictly in accordance with the Constitution and the law be the ultimate bulwark against unconstitutional legislation or excesses in administrative action.

(e) Our founding fathers have framed the constitution by giving the courts absolute jurisdiction and power to police and adjudicate on legislation as well as executive decisions in the right perspective. The important distinction is that in UK the court is not empowered to police legislation and declare them as ultra vires of their uncodified constitution though by way of interpretation of statute or judicial review they are permitted to declare the decision of executive was in breach of their uncodified constitution, etc. (see Peter Leyland: 2012, 'The Constitution of United Kingdom'). In addition our founding fathers to protect the constitution and as a further security to ensure the rule of law and order in the country is observed by all parties inclusive of the three pillars have entrusted the force and might of the state exclusively to His Majesty, by entrusting His Majesty as the Supreme Commander of the Armed Forces without any executive shackles as is placed in other countries on the Heads of the country such as UK (Queen) or India (President). In essence, if the pillar or pillars fail in their obligation the public are entitled to lodge a complaint petition with His Majesty, who is obliged pursuant to the Constitution and Constitutional Oath to independently adjudicate upon the complaint (without any executive shackles). And His Majesty to ensure order in the country and also as the last bastion within the constitutional framework is constitutionally bound to consider the problem, assess the consequence, evaluate alternative and if need be advance the remedy. No pillar can abrogate its role and constitutional oath and the judiciary is no exception and the judiciary without jurisprudence simply cannot say they have no judicial power. All pillars inclusive of constitutional functionaries are answerable to His Majesty more so when a complaint is lodged with His Majesty. Thus, our founding fathers of the constitution unlike the Indian Constitution have placed full responsibility in respect of 'Order in the Country' to His Majesty and His Majesty has a supreme role to play in policing the pillars as well as other constitutional functionaries, subject only to the constitutional framework and limitations. The relevant part of the constitutional oath of His Majesty pursuant to art. 37(1) reads as follows:

...and by virtue of that oath do solemnly and truly declare that We shall justly and faithfully perform (carry out) our duties in the administration of Malaysia in accordance with its laws and Constitution which have been promulgated or which may be promulgated from time to time in the future. Further, we do solemnly and truly declare that We shall at all time protect the Religion of Islam and uphold the rules of law and order in the country. (emphasis added)

(j) Constitutional Oath

Full compliance of constitutional oath of office guarantees rule of law and paves way for justice and economic progress.

The locus classic case which has compromised the oath of office of a judge and public law challenges and/or relief is the majority decision in the case of Government of Malaysia v Lim Kit Siang [1988] 2 MLJ 12, where, by the application of jurisprudence relating to parliamentary supremacy, the court held the respondent, a parliamentarian, had no locus standi to question the granting of largesse by the Government to a nominee company. In addition, the majority went to decide that the courts will not interfere with the policy of the Government. The irony of the case in our judicial history is that a three member panel of the Supreme Court related to the facts of that case had previously granted an interlocutory injunction recognising parliamentarian Lim had locus standi and the subsequent decision in unprecedented manner in law and practice went to hold that Lim had no locus standi. Lim's case within the parameters of judicial precedent as well as court practice arguably and crudely is seen as an unconstitutional decision delivered by the majority advocating equally an unconstitutional jurisprudence within the constitutional framework. I will explain this further.

Lim's case was related to giving of Government contracts without going through a tender process and/or not giving the tender to the highest bidder, etc. Basically, the issue was one relating to transparency, accountability and good governance which must be seen as the soul of rule of law and the constitution. The minority decision was based on the doctrine of constitutional supremacy where the judges held that the appellant had locus standi. The consequential result of the case led to Malaysian courts, far and large, applying doctrine of parliamentary supremacy in decision making process when it relates to substantial policy of the Government. Such an approach often did not inspire confidence among the critics though the majority of the judiciary was rightly or wrongly said to be following the rule of law as per judicial precedent. The irony of the decision is that the previous panel and the two dissenting judges, totalling five members of the Supreme Court in all had held Lim had locus standi. However, the three who said that Lim had no locus standi had been followed in subsequent cases based on 'stare decisis' principle. That is to say, the court was observing the rule of law but not based on constitutional supremacy but parliamentary supremacy, that too when total majority of five members of the two corams of the Supreme Court have decided arguably based on the rule of law relating to constitutional supremacy, and only three judges have decided by applying the rule of law relating to parliamentary supremacy. Lim's case had plagued the relief relating to fundamental rights and justice and is said to be continuing and is shamelessly impinging the rule of law and the constitution, substantially affecting justice.

Learned Professor Andrew Harding had summarised, Lim's case as follows:

"In 1988 the case of Government of Malaysia v. Lim Kit Siang [1988] 1 MLJ 50, appeared to draw a line under all the developments so far in administrative law in Malaysia, and to say that the law would develop no further. The case was also one of crucial importance politically; it was therefore a real test of the limits of judicial review. For these reasons it is worth considering in some detail.

The Leader of the Opposition, Lim Kit Siang, who was also an MP, a State Assemblyman, a taxpayer and a road user, sued for a declaration that a letter of intent given to a company (UEM), by the Government for the privatization of the construction of Malaysia's North-South Highway was invalid, and for an injunction to restrain UEM from signing any contract pursuant to the letter of intent. His main allegation was that the ministers involved in the Cabinet decision to grant the contract were guilty of criminally corrupt practices, in that they were biased in favour of UEM because it belonged to UMNO. He also alleged that the Government had rejected the tenders of two rival companies which were lower than UEM's, so that the Government had uneconomically committed huge expenditure from public funds.

Lim's motion for an interim injunction, a preliminary issue, was granted by the Supreme Court, sitting in a bench of three judges. The Government applied for the interim injunction to be set aside on the ground of lack of standing, and this application was also heard by the Supreme Court, which, by the narrowest possible margin, three to two, and, exceptionally, overruling its own previous decision in the same case, decided in favour of the Government.

The majority held that, where a statute created a criminal offence but no civil remedy, the AG was the guardian of the public interest and it was he alone who could enforce compliance with the law. No other person could, without the consent of the AG, bring an action of this kind (for an injunction in aid of enforcement of the criminal law) unless some private right of his was being interfered with, or he suffered special damage peculiar to himself. As a politician the respondent's remedy lay with Parliament and the electorate. In the course of their judgments the majority followed the law as laid down by the House of Lords before the statutory reform of English administrative law remedies in 1981, and held that later English developments were inapplicable.

Seah and Abdoocader SCJJ (dissenting) held that standing was a rule of practice and procedure to be laid down by the judges in the public interest, and was liable to be altered by the judges to suit the changing times. The respondent as an MP had brought the suit bona fide alleging Government wrongdoing in the award of the contract to UEM which would result in the illegal spending of billions of dollars. He therefore had a real interest in the subject-matter of the suit, which was not to enforce the criminal law but was a public-interest suit calling for judicial review of the legality of proposed executive action.

The failure of the majority to develop Malaysian law in this case is unfortunate. The reliance on the AG as the guardian of the public interest is difficult to understand: it is hardly likely that the AG would take such action against his political masters. The identity of the litigant is really an irrelevant issue when the courts consider serious allegations of abuse of power. On the other hand the case was political dynamite: if Lim had succeeded in his getting his claim into court, the credibility of the Government might have been seriously eroded.

Before we conclude too swiftly that this case marks the end of the development of the rules of standing in Malaysia, it is worth noting:

- (i) that the case lays down a rule which is very narrow in scope;
- (ii) that it is also contrary to the trend of decisions both in Malaysia and in the Commonwealth;
- (iii) that the decision is not necessarily correct, as is evidenced by the strong dissenting judgments and the decision overruled;
- (iv) that earlier decisions had opened up the standing rules; and
- (v) that the case was one which affected the very survival of the government in power.”

The learned Professor’s critical view on the decision of the Malaysian courts in public law in particular administrative law field reads as follows:

“The problem of administrative law, stated earlier in this Chapter, has not been given a clear answer by the Malaysian judiciary. However, one can attempt to estimate the results of their work.

Malaysian Judges clearly feel happier with judicial review of administrative action than with judicial review of legislation. In this respect they reflect faithfully their common-law background. In the absence of supporting control mechanisms within the administration they have effectively constructed a system of judicial review which is becoming a popular vehicle for complaints against the administration. This applies mainly to procedural issues, but the cases are by no means confined to procedural issues. Judicial review applications are now increasing rapidly year on year, as Table 2 shows.

TABLE 2: JUDICIAL REVIEW CASES, HIGH COURT, KUALA LUMPUR, 1987-1994

YEAR	REGIST'D	LEAVE	TRIAL	SI
1987	62	56	46	25
1988	77	76	72	41
1989	42	37	25	15
1990	54	42	35	16
1991	52	19	14	0
1992	34	19	17	2
1993	42	14	13	1
1994	87	83	83	25

The statistics indicate very clearly that judicial review shrank to almost a trickle during a very difficult period for the judiciary (1989-93), but the situation in 1994 and resembles that of the pre-1988 period.¹²⁰

At the same time the decisions evince a distaste for involvement in politically charged cases, especially where policies crucial to national development are involved. It is also true that there are inconsistencies of approach. To some extent, however, this is inevitable, given the subjective and variegated nature of judicial review.

Judicial review appears to have survived and flourished in conditions very different from those of England, where most of the doctrines developed in Malaysia originated. Given the pace of economic development and the increasing importance and sophistication of regulatory and adjudicative mechanisms in Malaysian government, and the maturity too of the interests and arguments involved in judicial review cases, it seems likely that judicial review will continue to grow, and although that growth will probably continue to be unobtrusive, the value of its effects is, and will continue to be, apparent.

What is perhaps most needed to bolster the judicial developments is a corresponding willingness on the part of the executive and the legislature to respond to public need and create more extra-judicial methods of challenging administrative decisions. Judicial review is a necessary but not sufficient condition for public confidence that the rights of individuals in the administrative process will be properly protected. The present situation resembles a skirmish over the no-man's land between executive and judicial power. A much better situation would be one in which both branches of the state co-operated in building up a much more systematic and available process of review of administrative actions according to principles which both regard as legitimate.”

The former Federal Court Judge and constitutional jurisprudence expert who was instrumental in anchoring basic structure jurisprudence in our public law field, Justice Gopal Sri Ram in the recent Ahmad Ibrahim Lecture in relation to Lim’s case, ranks it at the lowest ebb in the field of the Malaysian public law. The learned jurist had this to say:

“But once a prima facie case of an abuse of power is shown, for example that the approval for the construction of a road was given in breach of a statute, be it even a penal law, the court is duty bound to make inquiry and apply the appropriate level of intensity of review to determine whether there has been an abuse of power. The failure of the majority judgments in particular the judgment of Salleh Abas LP in Government of Malaysia v Lim Kit Siang [1988] 2 MLJ 12 to recognise this important principle ranks that case as the lowest ebb in the field of Malaysian public law. The dissents of Seah and Abdoolcader SCJJ really point the way forward. The way forward therefore lies in applying the highest level of scrutiny whenever a fundamental right is infringed and whenever an abuse of power by reason of unfairness is brought home. But there is a proviso to this. Those entrusted with the judicial power of the state must act according to established principles of constitutional and administrative law and not display a propensity that shows them to be — to paraphrase Lord Atkin — more pro-executive than the executive. When that happens, the rule of law dies as does the Constitution itself.” (Emphasis added.)

The observation of Professor Andrew Harding as well as Justice Gopal Sri Ram, in my view is an understatement. In my view, arguably the decision of majority in Lim’s case reflects the employment of the jurisprudence of parliamentary supremacy in public law field and in consequence it is not one of the ‘lowest ebb’ but the decision by the court is tainted with the jurisprudence relating to illegality, irrationality and procedural impropriety as advocated by Lord Diplock in the case of Council of Civil Service Unions v Minister for the Civil Service [1985] AC 374.

Arguably, Lim's case exposes judicial disaster in the administration of justice when by the court's decision the courts door to seek issues related to accountability, transparency and good governance which is the soul of rule of law, was more or less closed by advocating 'locus standi' of the litigant to question the policy of the Government. Professor Andrew Harding was subtle in his observation on the damage done by Lim's decision in public law field in contrast to the former Federal Court judge, Gopal Sri Ram. To put it bluntly, both the jurists in my view are saying the 'soul' of rule of law is necessary to check excesses by public decision makers to ensure economic success as well as fundamental rights in any democratic nation.

Arguably, the decision in Lim's case in blunt terms has substantially deprived the 'soul' of rule of law and it is now in the hands of jurists to do appropriate research to place back that part of the soul which was lost through Lim's decision to be restored back through the judgment of the court by the employment of constitutional supremacy jurisprudence to enhance justice. The good news is that the judiciary by its recent decision has commenced damage control and it is reflected in the decision of Hasan Lah FCJ in a case which I will deal with shortly where the Chief Justice Arifin Zakaria was also a member of the coram of the Federal Court.

It is disheartening to note that so far there is no research done by jurists or critics to demonstrate the consequence of Lim's judgment which had in actual fact compromised subsequent decisions of the court which had led to the compromise of the concept of transparency, accountability and good governance. This, in my view, has impinged on fundamental rights and justice and rule of law leading to the recent press statement by HRH, Rulers on the rule of law. It is now in the hands of all who are involved in the administration of justice to take steps to correct the shortcomings to sustain rule of law relating to constitutional supremacy and not parliamentary supremacy.

(k) India

It must be noted that the Indian courts at the early part after independence employed the jurisprudence relating to parliamentary supremacy to deal with constitutional issues. This is reflected in at least two decisions, namely: (i) Shankari Prasad Singh Deo v Union of India* AIR 1951 SC 458; (ii) Sajan Singh v State of Rajasthan* AIR 1965 SC 845. That progress was arrested by the employment of constitutional supremacy jurisprudence, which is reflected in two cases and subsequently followed in a number of other cases. The two important cases are (i) I.C. Golaknath v State of Punjab* AIR 1967 SC 1643; (ii) Kesavananda Bharathi v State of Kerala* [1973] 4 SCC 225. These two cases led to the launch of 'basic structure' jurisprudence by the Indian jurists as well as the judges, a concept which was not in vogue in the commonwealth then. Basic structure jurisprudence, which the court gave force to, was consistent with the oath of office of the judiciary and was done, notwithstanding the fact that the then distinguished, The Right Honourable Prime Minister of India, Jawaharlal Nehru, who was a barrister himself, was of the view that parliamentary supremacy jurisprudence must be employed by the courts. Though the word parliamentary supremacy jurisprudence was not mentioned by the renowned Prime Minister, learned author Dhanapalan (2015) at page 27 captures what he had said and that part reads as follows:

“Speaking on the Draft Constitution, Jawaharlal Nehru had said in the Constituent Assembly' that the policy of the abolition of big estates is not a new policy but one that was laid down by the National Congress years ago. "So far as we are concerned, we, who are connected with the Congress, shall, naturally give effect to that pledge completely and no legal subtlety, no change, is going to come in our way". He had further stated that within limits, no Judge and no Supreme Court will be allowed to constitute themselves into a third chamber; no Supreme Court or no judiciary will sit in judgment over the sovereign will of the Parliament which represents the will of the entire community; if we go wrong here and there, they can point it out; but in the ultimate analysis, where the future of the community is concerned, no judiciary must be in the way. According to Jawaharlal Nehru, the ultimatum is that the whole Constitution is a creature of Parliament.”

At this juncture, I must say that those who are involved in the study, practice and administration of constitutional and/or administrative law must take note that their research will not be complete if they have not had the opportunity to read the excellent book penned by Justice Dhanapalan, a retired judge of Madras High Court, titled 'Basic Structure Jurisprudence' which I had mentioned earlier.

I do not wish to set out what basic structure literally means, save to draw attention to what a well-known Senior Advocate in India and a constitutional law expert, K. Parasaran, in his Foreword to the book had said; and also the paragraph where Justice Dhanapalan had summarised the concept at page 30 respectively.

At page v and vi, learned Senior Advocate Parasaran says:

“The basic structure, inter alia, comprehends supremacy of the Constitution, federalism (quasi-federal), democracy, separation of powers, judicial independence comprising of (a) adjudicatory independence, (b) institutional independence and judicial review. The basic features are inextricably intertwined forming an integral whole. No basic feature can be disturbed by the exercise of the power of amendment or by exercise of judicial power of interpretation. None of the provisions of the Constitution can be so interpreted as to conflict with any of the basic features of the Constitution. Any amendment made which conflict with any of the basic features of the Constitution will be rendered unconstitutional. When a judgment of the Supreme Court, conflicts with any basic feature of the Constitution, the amending power being a constituent power can reverse the said judgment. The 24th Amendment reversed the law declared in Golaknath case on the interpretation of Article 13. The validity of the said amendment was upheld in Kesavananda Bharati case. It is in contrast to the plenary power of the Parliament. If an Act of Parliament reverses a judgment of court and usurp the judicial power or intermeddle with it by a plenary power, it will be unconstitutional. The invalidity or any defect in the enactment pointed out in the judgment has to be removed, the Act made retrospective and a validating provision inserted, if a judgment is to be neutralized. This principle does not apply to constitutional amendments. The validity of a constitutional amendment can be tested only on the touchstone of basic features.”

At page 30, Justice Dhanapalan says:

“There is no hard and fast rule for determining the basic structure of the Constitution. Different Judges keep different views regarding the theory of basic structure. But, at one point, they have similar view that Parliament has no power to destroy, alter or emasculate the ‘basic structure’ or ‘framework’ of the Constitution. If the historical background, the Preamble, the entire scheme of the Constitution and the relevant provisions thereof including Article 368 are kept in mind, then, there can be no difficulty in determining what are the basic elements of the basic structure of the Constitution. These words apply with greater force to the doctrine of basic structure, because the federal and democratic structure of the Constitution, the separation of powers and the secular character of our State are very much more definite than either negligence or natural justice. So, for the protection of welfare State, fundamental rights, unity and integrity of the nation, sovereign democratic republic and for liberty of thought, expression, belief, faith and worship, independence of judiciary are mandatory. None is above Constitution, including Parliament and Judiciary.”

As I said earlier, basic structure jurisprudence which is an Indian make is complex as set adumbrated by K. Parasaran as well as Justice Dhanapalan. Constitutional oath jurisprudence which is a Malaysian make is simple but it derives its jurisprudential strength from the Indian decision based on basic structure jurisprudence. That is the distinction, as well as the decision relating to arbitrariness by HRH Raja Azlan Shah in Sri Lempah case which I had stated earlier.

(I) Constitutional Oath, Basic Structure Jurisprudence and Evolutionary Constitutional Jurisprudence

Basic Structure Jurisprudence was unique and developed by the Indian jurists and judges to protect the Constitution in particular to sustain fundamental rights and justice. Constitutional oath jurisprudence is one of Malaysian make.

Constitutional oath jurisprudence in gist of it is that the legislature, executive and judiciary have taken an oath of office to preserve, protect and defend the constitution. In consequence, any arbitrary decision by them must be struck down to sustain the rule of law. In the Malaysian context HRH also has been vested with constitutional, judicial power to sustain the rule of law and order in the country.

Basic structure jurisprudence cannot be said to have been accepted in Malaysia as majority of the decision relating to core public law issues is addressed through the employment of parliamentary supremacy jurisprudence. However, in the field of Administrative Law, courts are vigilant in employing the doctrine of constitutional supremacy except when it relates to policy of the Government or relates to legislation or constitutional amendment. In such cases, courts are quick to revert to the jurisprudence relating to parliamentary supremacy.

In my view, Malaysia is going through an evolutionary process in respect of rule of law and the constitution as there are a number of judges who are committed to constitutional supremacy. This is reflected in the minority decision in Lim's case itself. Quite recently, Richard Malanjum CJSS Sabah and Sarawak in his decision in PP v Kok Wah Kuan* [2007] 6 CLJ 341 in support of constitutional supremacy jurisprudence had this to say:

“The amendment which states that 'the High Courts and inferior courts shall have jurisdiction and powers as may be conferred by or under federal law' should be by no means be read to mean that the doctrine of separation of powers and independence of the Judiciary are now no more the basic features of the Federal Constitution. I do not think that as a result of the amendment our courts have now become servile agents of a Federal Act of Parliament and that the courts are now only to perform mechanically and command or binding of a Federal law.”

A major breakthrough to debunk the locus standi proposition made in Lim's case was recently laid down by Hasan Lah FCJ in the case of Malaysia Trade Union Congress & Ors v Menteri Tenaga, Air dan Komunikasi & Anor* [2014] 3 MLJ 145 where the CJ Tun Arifin Zakaria was a member of the coram. The Federal Court through Hasan Lah FCJ had this to say:

“56. In India, the Indian judicial approach on standing has 'veered towards liberalisation of the locus standi as the courts realise that taking a restrictive view on this question will have many grievances unremedied' (see Principles of Administrative Law, MP Jain & S N Jain, (6th Ed) at p 1994.”

As I have already said, Malaysian jurisprudence on the constitution is going through an evolutionary process. The Federal Court in Malaysia Trade Union Congress case managed to break the self-imposed restraint by the majority in Lim's case which had employed parliamentary supremacy jurisprudence. Similar restraint was also placed by the Indian judges in the cases of Shankari Prasad and Sarjan Singh. However, that chain was shattered through the decision of Golak Nath and Kesavananda Bharathi by the employment of 'Basic Structure Jurisprudence'.

The Malaysian position and the convoluted arguments and decisions are all related to the hybrid jurisprudence courts employ to provide or not to provide the relief. The instant case is a reflection of the problem we are going through and it is no easy task for the court when the jurisprudence relating to rule of law stands nebulous. To be candid, the law and jurisprudence relating to the constitution, civil law in relation to public law field as well as Shariah Law and the jurisdiction and limitation for Parliament as well as State Legislature to enact are quite straight forward. However, the decision of the courts may vary. It all depends before which judge or Coram the matter has been fixed and what version of the rule of law is going to be applied. The end result is almost predictable in public law field.

APPEALS AND GROUNDS

[17] In my view, this case is in actual fact a judicial review of administrative decision and in consequence the nebulous jurisprudence which I have explained earlier can be kept to the bare minimum. The jurisprudence relating to judicial review application in administrative action has been clearly dealt by me in the case of Chong Chung Moi @ Christine Chong v The Government of the State of Sabah & Ors

[2007]5 MLJ 441, where I have cited all the leading authorities in India, England as well as Malaysia, etc. and many more other cases. I do not wish to repeat those principles as in this case the administration order of the Pendaftar Muallaf is nullity ab initio and ought to be set aside of right for non-compliance of section 96 and 106 of the Administration of the Religion of Islam (Perak) Enactment 2004. The Federal Court in Badiaddin bin Mohd Mahidin & Anor v Arab Malaysian Finance Bhd [1998] 1 MLJ 393, through Justice Gopal Sri Ram had this to say:

“As a general rule, orders of a court of unlimited jurisdiction may not be impugned on the ground that they are void in the sense that they may be ignored or disobeyed. However, it is well settled that even courts of unlimited jurisdiction have no authority to act in contravention of written law. Of course, so long as an order of a court of unlimited jurisdiction stands, irregular though it may be, it must be respected. But where an order of such a court is made in breach of statute, it is made without jurisdiction and may therefore be declared void and set aside in proceedings brought for that purpose. It is then entirely open to the court, upon the illegality being clearly shown, to grant a declaration to the effect that the order is invalid and to have it set aside.”

[18] Badiaddin’s case will equally apply in judicial review matters when dealing with the issue of illegality, irrationality and procedural impropriety. I will explain this further in my judgment and will also show the order of the Syariah Court in which the appellant had named a non-Muslim as a party and obtained an order against a non-Muslim party by misleading the Syariah Court is an abuse of process of the Syariah Court jurisdiction [see section 50 of the Administration of the Religion of Islam (Perak) 2004] and also in breach of constitutional guarantees relating to procedural fairness to non-Muslims.

[19] The misconduct of the appellant requires the relevant authorities and/or the Syariah Court to move contempt proceedings against the appellant in the Syariah Court to arrest the abuse as well as set aside the order made in excess of jurisdiction. Such abuse by a litigant in Syariah Courts often creates tension between Muslims and non-Muslims when the state has clearly made laws to say the Syariah Court will have no jurisdiction to hear dispute in relation to a non-Muslim and the said provision in actual fact guarantees the constitutional right of non-Muslims by ensuring they are not dragged into Syariah Courts. The two abuse of process order obtained by the appellant through the Syariah Court dated 29-9-2009 and 24-4-2009 reads as follows:

[20] The Syariah Court order dated 24-04-2009 as well as the order dated 29-09-2009 was made in excess of jurisdiction of the Syariah Court as it was made against a defendant who was a non-Muslim and section 50 which I have set out below does not vest the Syariah Court with jurisdiction at all. When orders are made in breach of Rule of Law and inconsistent with Rukun Negara, it creates hardship. All Malaysians are obliged to follow Rukun Negara strictly to avert distrust and tension and create harmony which was the prime object of Rukun Negara.

[21] Section 50 of the Administration of the Religion of Islam (Perak) 2004 states:

“Jurisdiction of Syariah High Court.

(1) A Syariah High Court shall have jurisdiction throughout the State of Perak Darul Ridzuan and shall be presided over by a Syariah High Court Judge.

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), the Chief Syariah Judge may sit as a Syariah High Court Judge and preside over such Court.

(3) The Syariah High Court shall--

(a) in its criminal jurisdiction, try any offence committed by a Muslim and punishable under the Islamic Family Law (Perak) Enactment 2004 [Enactment No. 6 of 2004] or under any other written law prescribing offences against precepts of the religion of Islam for the time being in force, and may impose any punishment provided therefor; and

(b) in its civil jurisdiction, hear and determine all actions and proceedings if all the parties to the actions or proceedings are Muslims and the action or proceedings relate to--

- (i) bethoral, marriage, ruju', divorce, annulment of marriage (fasakh), nusyuz, or judicial separation (faraq) or any other matter relating to the relationship between husband and wife.
- (ii) any disposition of or claim to property arising out of any of the matters set out in subparagraph (i);
- (iii) the maintenance of dependants, legitimacy, or guardianship or custody (hadhanah) of infants;
- (iv) the division of, or claims to, harta sepencarian;

- (v) wills or gifts made while in a state of marad-al-maut;
- (vi) gifts intervivos; or settlements made without adequate consideration in money or money's worth by a Muslim;
- (vii) wakaf or nazr;
- (viii) division and inheritance of testate or intestate property;
- (ix) the determination of the persons entitled to share in the estate of a deceased Muslim or the shares to which such persons are respectively entitled;
- (x) a declaration that a person is no longer a Muslim;
- (xi) a declaration that a deceased person was a Muslim or otherwise at the time of his death; and
- (xii) other matters in respect of which jurisdiction is conferred by any written law.”

[22] It is clear from section 50 that (i) the Syariah Court has no jurisdiction to hear an application by the appellant when he names a non-Muslim as a defendant and/or respondent; (ii) this case has nothing to do with section 50(3) (x); (iii) this case also has nothing to do with section 50(3) (xi). Very importantly, all parties to this action must appreciate that section 50 of the Administration of the Religion of Islam (Perak) 2004 does not give any jurisdiction to the Syariah Court to issue certificate relating to conversion (emphasis added).

[23] In this case, the certificate of conversion was given by Pendaftar Muallaf and the certificate reads as follows:

[24] If the certificate relating to conversion had to be challenged, it has to be done by way of judicial review. It has to be set aside if the order of the Pendaftar Muallaf is a nullity ab initio based on Badiaddin principle. It can be done by way of judicial review and/or writ or originating summons seeking a declaration to nullify the order. In essence, the primary issues involved here has nothing to do with Syariah Courts or its jurisdiction or constitutional principles as advocated by the parties as well as the learned trial judge. The discussion of Syariah Court and its jurisdiction in this judgment is only to demonstrate the conduct of the appellant who had abused the Syariah process.

[25] Subsequent to obtaining the custody order from the Syariah Court in breach of section 50, the appellant made an application to the Pendaftar Muallaf Perak in breach of the procedure set out in section 96 and 106 of the Administration of the Religion of Islam (Perak) Enactment 2004. I have repeatedly read sections 96 and 106 and it is my judgment that the application was in breach of the said two sections. That two sections does not permit a third party in this case a parent from making an application. The application must be done by the person who wants to convert himself to the religion of Islam and must satisfy the requirement of section 96. If it is a minor, the applicant must be the minor who wants to convert and he must obtain the consent pursuant to section 106 from parent or guardian. For a valid administrative conversion to take place the application in the instant case, must be made by the three children and the parent must consent. There is no provision for a parent to make the application. In addition, the three children must and I repeat must affirm what is often called in Arabic as 'Kalimah Shahadah' which is set out in section 96. If a person or child has not affirmed the 'Kalimah Shahadah' there is no provision in written law for valid conversion to take place and it is as simple as that.

[26] In the instant case, it is not in dispute that the children have not made the application, have not recited the 'Kalimah Shahadah' or have requested the appellant to give consent to their conversion. In consequence, without administrative compliance of section 96 and 106, the Registrar of Muallaf could not have issued in law a certificate under section 101 of the Perak Enactment. The certificate is nullity ab initio and just need to be set aside by a court of competent jurisdiction as advocated by the Federal Court in Badiaddin's case.

[27] The said section 96, 106 and 101 of the Administration of the Religion of Islam (Perak) Enactment 2004 reads as follows:

Section 96

Requirement for conversion to the religion of Islam.

(1) The following requirements shall be complied with for a valid conversion of a person to the religion of Islam:

(a) the person must utter in reasonably intelligible Arabic the two clauses of the Affirmation of Faith;

(b) at the time of uttering the two clauses of the Affirmation of Faith the person must be aware that they mean "I bear witness that there is no God but Allah and I bear witness that the Prophet Muhammad S.A.W. is the Messenger of Allah"; and

(c) the utterance must be made of the person's own free will.

(2) A person who is incapable of speech may, for the purpose of fulfilling the requirement of paragraph (1)(a), utter the two clauses of the Affirmation of Faith by means of signs that convey the meaning specified in paragraph (i)(b).

Section 106

Capacity to convert to the religion of Islam.

For the purpose of this Part, a person who is not a Muslim may convert to the religion of Islam if he is of mind and—

(a) has attained the age of eighteen years; or

(b) if he has not attained the age of eighteen years, his parent or guardian consents in writing to his conversion.

Section 101

Certificate of Conversion to the Religion of Islam.

- (1) The Registrar shall furnish every person whose conversion to the religion of Islam has been registered a Certificate of Conversion to the Religion of Islam in the prescribed form.
- (2) A certificate of Conversion to Religion of Islam shall be conclusive proof of the facts stated in the Certificate.

[28] It is my judgment that the certificates issued by the Pendaftar Muallaf Perak is a nullity ab initio and the order of the High Court quashing the administrative decision was correct not for the reasons stated by the learned trial judge but strictly within the reasons I have stated in this judgment.

[29] I also do not think it is necessary to deal with the convoluted arguments raised and argued by the parties. The authorities cited by the parties are equally convoluted in jurisprudence and has no direct nexus to the facts of the case.

[30] In my view, Syariah laws in this country are quite straight forward and does not infringe the rights of non-Muslims in any manner and a just decision can be reached if counsel are sufficiently learned in civil, criminal, constitutional and Syariah law and prepared to balance the rights of the parties and/or judicial principles, not only with the Federal Constitution but also with the Rukun Negara to achieve a just result. Such qualities in knowledge have become a rare breed in Malaysia. That is to say, if a person is an expert in Syariah law only and is not an expert in all fields of law, vice versa then his version of jurisprudence will be of suspect. That is dangerous and that disadvantage in knowledge must be corrected. One giant in knowledge in Civil and Syariah jurisprudence where judicial notice can be taken is Prof. Emeritus Ahmad Ibrahim and such personal with that level of jurisprudence as I said is difficult to find and/or if they are any, they do not engage themselves in disseminating the jurisprudence by writing.

[30A] The soul of the Rukun Negara is to uphold the rule of law and respect each other's rights and not to simply take refuge on constitutional arguments alone. Such an attempt will not subscribe to common sense approach. It must not be missed that common sense approach is part of our jurisprudence in sustaining rule of law. Those jurists who do not have sufficient exposure to knowledge and jurisprudence will often place convoluted arguments deeming the sanctity of religious values of Muslims as well as non-Muslims which are protected species under the Federal Constitution. That is not permissible within the parameters of Rukun Negara. To put it in another way, once a person is born and bred as a Muslim or converts to a Muslim, he is expected to live and die as a Muslim unless some concession is provided in the State Syariah legislation. This is a well-known Quranic jurisprudence of the religion of Islam and that was known even before the constitution was formulated and is also a protected principle under Article 4(1) of the Federal Constitution which has to be read with Article 160 of the Federal Constitution which defines law.

Article 4(1) of the Federal Constitution reads as follows:

“4. (1) This Constitution is the supreme law of the Federation and any law passed after Merdeka Day which is inconsistent with this Constitution shall, to the extent of the inconsistency, be void.”

Article 160 of the Federal Constitution defining law reads as follows:

“law” includes written law, the common law in so far as it is in operation in the Federation or any part thereof, and any custom or usage having the force of law in the Federation or any part thereof;

[31] Islamic Jurisprudence was already in place in Malaysia for more than five centuries and that too even before the British colonised Malaya. The fundamental rights provision in the Federal Constitution does not over ride this protected principle and those who say otherwise cause only disharmony and hardship to the public and does not subscribe to the definition of law in Article 160 of the Federal Constitution. In truth, dwelling into hair splitting arguments is unnecessary in a blessed land where bread, butter and honey pours to those who are industrious. Every Malaysian must take a balance approach to maintain social order and that is part of the public role in subscribing to Rule of Law which I repeat is part of Rukun Negara.

[32] En passant to assist the jurisprudence in this area and to arrest convoluted jurisprudence, I will say that all relevant authorities and counsel for litigants must take note that:

- (i) Article 121(1A) is primarily aimed at born Muslims. In addition, by reading the relevant section of the Perak Enactment (which other states also have) the Syariah Court has only jurisdiction to parties in the litigation who are Muslims, i.e. either born Muslims or by conversion.

- (ii) When it relates to Syariah issues relating to born Muslims, the case laws are very clear that Syariah Court is the supreme arbiter under Article 121(1A) of the Federal Constitution, unless the exception applies. If the subject matter is not within the Syariah Court but Syariah principles are involved, the civil courts are the sole arbiter under the Federal Constitution. For example, Islamic Banking matter, Probate and Administration matter, etc. In addition, if a Syariah Enactment itself has to be challenged, it has to be done through the civil courts. Only civil courts presently have the ability to deal with judicial review of (i) executive decision; (ii) legislation; (iii) constitutional amendment (iv) policy decision. The jurisprudence relating to judicial review as practiced in Malaysia is unknown under the Syariah jurisprudence. Syariah jurisprudence may have its own methodology of judicial review but it is not part of our rule of law. Just arguing for the sake of argument that Syariah Court can deal with judicial review and/or all issues relating to Federal Constitution is not a knowledge based argument and it does not subscribe to rule of law.
- (iii) The jurisprudential problem in Syariah personal law of Muslim arises by virtue of case laws and is one not related to born Muslims but converts or purported converts etc; who do not follow strict guidelines enacted in State Laws relating to Muslims and/or who do not want to subscribe to the sanctity of Islam and/or good values of Islam. It is also because the relevant authorities are not being vigilant enough to ensure rule of law is maintained in the country and/or failing to appreciate the rule of law as well as Rukun Negara which states: (a) Belief in God; (b) Loyalty to King and Country; (3) Supremacy of the Constitution; (4) Rule of Law; (5) Courtesy and Morality. (Emphasis added). For example, in this case, if Rule of Law and Rukun Negara have been observed, the appellant would have been penalised for making an application in the Syariah Court, naming a non-Muslim as the defendant. Further, if the Pendaftar Muallaf has appreciated the Rule of Law and Rukun Negara, he will not have issued the certificate when very importantly the three children have not affirmed the 'Kalimah Shahadah'.

- (iv) In addition, I must say that Article 12(3) and 12(4) of the Federal Constitution has nothing to do with conversion. It only permits a parent or guardian from deciding the religion of the child for purpose of worship of a religion other than his own. That article does not help the appellant at all. It has nothing to do with conversion. The difference is not like an apple and orange but that of marble and pumpkin. In addition, it will not apply to a child who has not affirmed the 'Kalimah Shahadah'; and it cannot apply to infant at all. Only upon affirmation of the 'Kalimah Shahadah' the child can be converted. Selecting the religion does not mean the child has been converted. Case laws which have not made out the distinction will be of no assistance save to say it has to be corrected by due process of law.

Article 12(3) and (4) of the Federal Constitution reads as follows:

“(3) No person shall be required to receive instruction in or to take part in any ceremony or act of worship of a religion other than his own.

(4) For the purposes of Clause (3) the religion of a person under the age of eighteen years shall be decided by his parent or guardian.”

- (v) All parties must take note that the Constitution gives ample protection to freedom of religion. That is not an issue but it cannot be abused by literal interpretation of the Constitution without reading into it the Rukun Negara and also without applying the common sense approach advocated by Lord Denning which I have dealt with in a number of judgments. The State laws relating to religion applies to all Muslims. Whether born Muslims or converts. Once a person is a born and bred as a Muslim or becomes lawfully as a convert, he is expected to respect the sanctity of the religion. The law here as well as the Rukun Negara does not allow a Muslim to hide behind constitutional provision to say he has freedom to choose the religion. However, constitutional framework and Rukun Negara will assist all Muslims if the State laws are unconstitutional and/or impinges on the rights of a Muslim or creates hardship to a Muslim when a Muslim's Syariah personal law as advocated by the Sunni Sect namely Hanafi, Shafie, Hambali or Maliki does not require the Muslim to go through such hardship. State laws for Muslims which does not confirm to the Sunni Sect can always be challenged and it is provided for in all State Syariah legislation. I have dealt with it in the case of Yong Fuat Meng v Chin Yoon Kew [2008] 5 MLJ 226 and I do not wish to repeat. Such issues, if any, have to be corrected by way of judicial review of legislation whether enacted by Parliament or State Assembly.

- (vi) It is also for the appellant in this case, to take note that the Quran ordains that the appellant sorts out his obligations. In Yong Fuat Meng v Chin Yoon Kew [2008] 5 MLJ 226, on this issue I have made the following observation:

“Islamic Jurisprudence has never been an obstacle for Muslims to fulfil legal requirement and/or equitable or ethical requirement of the law of the country or for that matter, for the purpose of civil law of marriage the contractual commitment of the convert. [See Al-Quran (al-Maida: 1); (al-Nisaa: 59)]”

- (vii) It is well settled and also upheld by the provision of similar section such as section 50(3)(b) in all State Syariah legislation that if the issue is to be decided involves a Muslim and a non-Muslim, the jurisdiction does not lie with the Syariah Court and common sense will dictate that it has to fall under the Civil Courts and convoluted jurisprudence does not help. If some comfort need to be given to litigants in hybrid cases, it does not stop the CJ from directing special courts to hear Syariah matters between Muslims and non-

Muslims with judges conversant in both the laws. It also does not stop the CJ from liaising with the Attorney General to amend the Courts of Judicature Act to allow the Chief Syariah judge of the state or his representative to sit in civil courts with two other judges, one a Muslim and another a non-Muslim to reach a decision. I must say, such a situation will only arise when the person is a convert and not a born and bred as a Muslim. Such cases in a year are handful only but presently it violently shakes the Civil as well as Syariah Courts Administration of Justice in terms of public perception and confidence, and also causes disharmony. For litigants who are born Muslims, it is without doubt that the Syariah Court has the sole jurisdiction in this country. However, it will not be wrong in jurisprudence to obtain the consent of constitutional functionaries to have one court based on the Federal system, to deal with matters relating to converts and non-Muslims to arrest the nation's woes in this area of jurisprudence. This case and the publicity in media will stand as a witness to the woes.

- (viii) A simple methodology as suggested above will promote racial harmony and respect for the Government and Government Agencies as well as provide satisfaction for litigant in the administration of justice in Malaysia and is a recipe to avoid adverse global and/or public perception.

[33] For reasons stated above, I will dismiss all the appeals with costs to the respondent, with a note that my learned brother Balia Yusof bin

Haji Wahi JCA and sister Badariah binti Sahamid JCA by majority had allowed the appeals with no order as to costs.

I hereby order so.
